

TAME MEETING AT MONROE HALL

Candidates Make the Same Plea for Votes Without Arousing Enthusiasm.

The meeting of the Clay Ward Activities at Monroe Hall last night was much like the recent one, and there was little interest in the proceedings.

President Arthur C. Harman occupied the chair. There were speeches by several candidates, though nothing developed which in any way tended to arouse public interest. Lee Todd was the first speaker. He set out his claims briefly for the office of City Sergeant, and was followed by C. M. Angie, who spoke for James Anthony for the same position. John L. Satterfield, who followed, said he would stay sober and be constantly on the job. He elected John E. Epps speaker, telling the members of the club how much he desired to hold the office of City Sergeant for one year, if for no longer.

Colonel Robert Caldwell, who is a candidate for Attorney General, was called upon, but he refrained from making any extended remarks until the city campaign is out of the way. Councilmen Umlauf and Davis and Harry Carter spoke briefly along general lines for the upbuilding of the club, and Minnie Folkes told the audience in a few words that he would like to succeed himself as Commonweal's Attorney.

The last speech was by Thomas Maxwell. He only wanted to know why he had been imprisoned recently by the city authorities, and there being no answer to his inquiry, he left the hall and the meeting adjourned.

PARIS SITUATION GROWING SERIOUS

Mrs. Farou being much applauded. The American guests were Mesdames Walter Burns, Glasgow, and J. A. Lester. Ladies Lister-Kaye, and J. A. Lester-Ker and Cheyenne. Americans were much in evidence at a smart amateur performance of "Moussu," under the patronage of the Princess of Wales, who was present with her second son. Mesdames Ritchie, Donaldson, Neumann and Lewis Harcourt, Lady Essex and Mrs. Reed had a box, which they shared with the Countess of Granard.

All wore the smartest spring costumes, and much befriended hats. The Duchess of Marlborough's first public appearance since her return was at the opening of the Academy, where she, with Mrs. Oliver Belmont, was an interesting observer of the pictures. Since her absence from town Sunderland House has been redecorated, and it is hoped it will be opened for some of these delightful entertainments.

Germany Can Turn Out Dreadnoughts

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 8.—Despite the optimistic assurances of the British government of its ability to build and provide for Dreadnoughts faster than Germany and to continue to do so, the latest information from Germany contradicts these assurances. The Krupp have ready ten pits for the trial of heavy gun-mountings, and are making rapid progress with them. They will accomplish thirty gun-mountings annually, or enough for six Dreadnoughts. Under extra pressure this number of pits will turn out forty gun-mountings, enough for eight Dreadnoughts.

When the additional eight pits are ready, fifty-four mounts can be turned out, and under extra pressure seventy-two, enough for eleven and fourteen Dreadnoughts, respectively. The net result is that in the course of a year the Germans will possess seventeen ships for building Dreadnoughts, with power to turn out gun-mountings for fourteen annually.

WELCOMES AMBASSADOR

Russian Paper is Glad Mr. Rockhill is Assigned to That Country.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

ST. PETERSBURG, May 8.—The Novoye Vremya publishes an editorial welcoming W. W. Rockhill as ambassador to Russia. It asserts that America, more than on any occasion, has rendered the friendly turns done her by Russia, and it refers to the anti-Russian sympathies of Americans during the late war. This ingratitude resulted in no advantage to the United States, which fact is beginning to be generally recognized among Americans.

"Mr. Rockhill," says the Novoye Vremya, "belongs among those few American politicians who have resisted the epidemic of Russophobia on the American continent. We can welcome his appointment as a sign of the return of the United States to healthy political views. Perhaps he may succeed in mitigating the deep disillusionment that resulted from the acts of the United States in the trying period experienced by Russia in the Far East in the beginning of the century."

INTEREST IS ABSORBING

England's Budget Continues to Attract the Attention of the Public.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 8.—The budget continues to absorb the public attention of the country. It is now self-evident that the budget is the most important event of the year. The budget will modify voluntarily certain provisions when the bill is introduced in detail. Scarcely a day passes without an audience with the Chancellor of the Exchequer in order to protest, and with regularity the budget is discussed in the House of Commons. The budget is a subject of great interest to the public. The budget is a subject of great interest to the public. The budget is a subject of great interest to the public.

WARNED AWAY

League Club Suffragettes Prevented Lord Greve's Visit to Meeting.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 8.—The League Club has been placed in a difficult position through its suffragette members. It was decided that the club should give a dinner to the foreign journalists when they come to London to attend the international convention. Lord Greve accepted an invitation to preside.

As he is a cabinet minister, the suffragette members of the club declared their intention to leave him with regard to votes for women. In vain the executive committee pleaded for him. The suffragettes were as adamant as the club. They said they had their word to their societies and that they must keep it. The club's only recourse was to send word to Lord Greve not to come. The club's suffragettes feel as a deep humiliation.

SHAKESPEARE'S PLACE

Thirty-nine Thousand Paid for Admission to Shakespeare's Place.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

LONDON, May 8.—At the annual meeting of the trustees of the Shakespeare's Place Association, held at Stratford-on-Avon, it was stated that 39,000 visitors had paid for admission to the poet's house last year, sixty-eight nationalities being represented. Lord Roden had promised to prepare a list of plants grown in the birthplace garden, which contains every flower and shrub mentioned in Shakespeare's plays.

DARING ROBBERY PLAN

Russian Criminals Hoped to Dig Into the Treasury Building.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

GORI, RUSSIA, May 8.—A daring plan to rob the treasury of Gori, in which $100,000 was kept, was discovered last evening. The scheme of the criminals, five men and a woman, was to dig a tunnel into the building from outside. They had progressed a distance of 25 feet and had reached a point directly below the cellar when a book-keeper heard sounds of excavating and summoned the police to investigate, with the result that all six were captured.

HOW THE SULTAN SPENT HIS TIME

Lived in Constant Fear and His Amusements Were Very Few.

(Condensed from Georges Dory's "Private Life of the Sultan.")

The late Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Hamid, is an early riser. He gets up between 4:30 and 5 A. M. A few ablutions in cold water suffice him, and after exercising a little he passes into his study, where he drinks a cup of Turkish coffee. He then lights the first of innumerable cigarettes, which he will smoke without interruption until he goes to bed, and all of which he has made before him for his long promenades.

During his long promenades in Yildiz Park, Abdul Hamid, who, like every other Oriental, is fond of coffee, had himself followed by his head coffee-maker, who carried with him a lighted slave and everything necessary to prepare on the spot the small cup of mocha.

A pastime of which the Sultan has always been very fond since his early youth is shooting. His skill with firearms is so great that he has been seen to write his name on a wall twenty-five paces away with bullets, and at this distance his oranges thrown into the air without missing one.

Sometimes, during moments of leisure, the Sultan goes to the harem, where he takes a glass of Oriental brandy, while a melodious voice sings a slow Oriental romance to him. More often, however, he shuts himself up in his workshop, where he busies himself with clock-making, ceramics, painting and even chemical analysis, for cautious monarch that he is, he has taken care to render himself competent to examine any foods or beverages that may be under suspicion. He is an excellent carpenter in his youth. He designs or supervises all buildings in Yildiz, and has models made of all.

His Majesty's Menia.

His Majesty's private kitchen is a little cell with barred windows and an iron door, resembling a large safe. There it is that his private chef prepares the bread-basket, and he, in turn, is followed by a fifth, who grasps religiously a water bottle, inclosed in a red case, and also sealed. The Kelardji breaks the seals before His Majesty and presents him the dishes.

Abdul Hamid always eats alone, and his meals last only a few minutes. He touches lightly a few dishes and has the remainder carried to this and that courtier.

Sometimes the despot, seized with a sudden suspicion, orders the Kelardji to taste the dish. He also surrounds himself with cats and dogs, to which he gives pieces of meat before touching it himself. He is a great lover of brandy and the glass of champagne, although his religion forbids it.

His Amusements.

After dinner Abdul Hamid resumes the reading of his spies' reports. In the intervals of which, if he is in good humor, he sends for his jesters. One of those who knew best how to amuse him was the late Khatiane Imamy. His master used to throw him into the water, rub black oil over his face and play on him a thousand tricks of this kind.

The Sultan loves the theatre. His private theatre is adjacent to the Imperial Kiosk. He is often present at the theatrical performances, concerts, cinematograph and phonographic sessions. He has two troupes—Turkish and European. A European troupe for operettas and operas. A curious fact is that in each of them there are only two or three women, and most of the female roles are played by men dressed as women. In public, Abdul Hamid watches the performances. The theatre is poorly lighted and the attendance is limited to a few persons.

The Sultan, who studied music in his youth, can play for four or five on the piano, and he is fond of certain pieces, such as "La Traviata," "Il Trovatore" and "Faust." Topical songs please him, but he has never been able to understand classic music.

He is fond of the dark.

Abdul Hamid goes to bed late, as he likes to sleep as little as possible. Nightfall frightens him and darkness terrifies him. The smallest rooms and out-of-the-way places are lighted brilliantly from twilight until dawn with electric lights, though he will not permit them in Constantinople. To drive away the terrible slanders, he has the palace orchestra play until a very late hour or else gives orders that men march ceaselessly before his room, so that the sound of their measured tramp may calm his nerves.

Before going to sleep he has his foster-brother, Ismet Bey, read to him. The Sultan from the beginning has shown a marked preference for shop-girl literature. Books which deal with rape, assassinations, abductions, and other deeds of violence excite his interest to the highest possible degree. Among more serious works of philosophy and politics, His Majesty has read "The Principles of Machiavelli," taking this work of the Florentine historian as his vade mecum and guide.

Separated from his reader by a screen, he listens in silence from the ceiling, when he serves him as a slave of the night, until, overcome by fatigue, he falls asleep. He often wakes during the night and solitude is then unbearable to him. Sometimes, in the middle of the night, he summons a confidential man; at other times, seized with sudden anxiety, he sends for an adviser and holds lengthy council with him. If he wakes with a fright, he summons a eunuch, and he sends for some individual, hair

Lived Three Weeks Buried in Cabin Under Snow Slide.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)

SILVERTON, COL., May 8.—A diary found to-day beneath the body of Louis Pleitas in his cabin, fourteen miles east of here, told the story of a death in snow. The diary revealed that he had lived for at least three weeks buried under a terrible snowslide, through which he was unable to dig.

Here is the way the diary reads: "Dec. 15—Taken suddenly ill. In great pain. Dec. 15—Am getting worse. Dec. 16—Snowslide covered cabin. Dec. 25—Christmas day. Too weak to dig out of slide; can't get to town. Jan. 1—Believe I am dying. Jan. 2—Too weak to get up. Jan. 3—Jan. 4—Can't get up. Jan. 5—Unintelligible scratches."

So Pleitas died of starvation, absolutely no food being found in the Lime Creek cabin where his body lay on the rude bed.

STATUE TO POET

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW, Unveiled in Washington Friday.

Juggler, half sorcerer, and makes him explain the dream. Often he suddenly leaves his bed, and going out on one of the terrace walks, he looks at the nearby mountains and the vast horizon with a night glass as if to make sure that no enemy is marching unawares on Yildiz.

His Own Doctor.

Possessing a smattering of medical knowledge, and urged on by his suspicions of every one around him, he doctors his own ailments.

One cannot imagine what ridiculous precautions his microbiphobia prompts him to take. His papers, reports and documents intended for His Majesty must first pass through a disinfecting stove before reaching him.

His wardrobe is poorly furnished, and he is generous with his old clothes. A tailor has never been permitted to take his measure. That, he thinks, is dangerous.

The imperial pockets are many, all deep and queerly arranged. They serve him both as archives and arsenals. In addition to putting in them the numerous reports from spies he also carried in them the three revolvers with which he is always armed. Always suspicious, he permits no one to put their hands in his pockets. The habit he has of always carrying firearms renders his timidity dangerous for others, and up to this time it has cost the lives of a large number of innocent beings.

In his harem he owns a living collection of the most precious specimens of Oriental beauty. The number of his children is relatively small—actually only thirteen.
